

Name

Instructor

Subject

Date

Personal hidden qualities

The world is composed of people of a diversified ethnicity with different cultural beliefs and practices. This has been witnessed from the steadily increasing population that has hit close to seven billion. Human beings have different behaviors and attitudes based on the environmental factors prevailing around an individual which substantially determines how one behaves. Every individual has got personal values that they stand by and are always willing to preserve the personal qualities despite the differences that might be witnessed in the everyday life experiences. Notwithstanding the fact that every human is given a portion of qualities to guide them, some individuals tend to assume that other people live in isolation with the human qualities mainly due to minimal interaction levels they have with them. Failure to develop a positive bond between individuals can be so detrimental in the sense that it makes people lead an alienated lifestyle, and they are not able to identify the potential existing in each other. Moreover, inability to share our ideas even at friends' level would limit the ability of one to notice the potential existing in their friend.

As an individual, I am not an exception when it comes to hidden qualities and capabilities. I possess the personal value of kindness, desire to know and ability to work in a competitive environment.

My competitive nature is somehow a hidden character that most of my pals might not be well vast with, but it's a value that I started developing right from a tender age of eight years old. This, I have been able to express very well when it comes to football which is also one of my favorite games. I developed an interest in football at a very tender age and since then I have grown to love soccer, and I can express my skills quite well on the football field. My competitive nature is not only limited to sports like football but also in every other aspect of human life as I have grown to believe that with a lot of determination and focus as people, we can achieve great things if we believe and work on our goals. Furthermore, competition should not be limited to fellow humans around us but should be done even at a personal level. I have realized that I do incredible things whenever I focus on competing with myself, and this has been the secret behind my success in life. It has given me the virtue of patience and not wanting to quit even whenever I am faced with a difficult task ahead of me, a value that has seen me do great things in my life.

I do believe that my competitive nature can be looked at with different perceptions when it comes to my friends. This is because some of them with whom we always interact would view it as a positive virtue which can change their way of thinking while those with whom we seldom interact with would perceive it as a selfish character. This may be quite detrimental to our relationship as they would see me as an individual who is never open to sharing ideas with pals.

Again, assisting the needy people has remained one of my virtues since I was young. Looking at someone suffering is my major weakness and as such, I will always strive to use whatever little I have to assist the needy people in the society. Helping other people has always enabled me to have the inner peace and comfort with no guilt as I do believe that if I offer any form of assistance to a suffering fellow, then there is some reward from above. Moreover, human life is not all about oneself but about assisting each other because we need each other in one way or another. Uplifting fellow people makes me feel better because one do not have to suffer much if I am in a position to help them with the little resources in my possession.

The fact that I am in a position to assist a few individuals here and there does not mean that I am financially stable, but it is a sign to show that I care for humanity, and I have the heart that feels for the suffering people.

Support for humankind is not limited to financial assistance but can be in the form of emotional or physical support. Emotional support in the form of advice can be very vital to a friend who is possibly undergoing some stress or mental torture. Offering physical support to the physically challenged people can be so helpful to them. Offering them some little financial aid is also one of my greatest happiness, and it makes them appreciate me much. I believe in doing well to my fellow human beings as it has a hidden reward from God. My friends who are close to me are aware of this unknown quality, and they tend to encourage me to continue with the same spirit. This has made our friendship stand strong for quite an extended period and for sure it will still maintain the bond between us.

Lastly, as the scientists say that real innovators are always on the run to learn something new, I am one of them because I have been a curious person ever since I was young. I am always determined to learn something new every moment of my life, and I strive to get this done by whatever it takes me to get it achieved. My curiosity inspires me much as I can create a new change in my life and the lives of those living with me. The fact that technological advancement is at its core in the world today makes it even a better place for innovators like me because I can identify new things and start working on them. This has made the world a stunning place to be in especially regarding technology because I love technology so much. Moreover, some of the latest technological inventions like the ultra-slim laptops with high-speed performance make me amused of how technology can be so friendly. I tend to focus much on the secret behind the operations of these technological inventions and not their utilities, an attitude that has brought a lot of curiosity in me. I have also come to realize that interest at a young age can be a great determinant of one's career by using me as an example because I was so much into computers at a tender age and now am pursuing computer science in college.

In conclusion, it has become very clear to me that identification of one's potential is very significant to their general growth both socially and at a personal level. Good qualities can act as a bond that keeps friends together while poor qualities can break the bond between friends apart.

Work cited